“Sometimes, especially when children are younger, discipline might involve time-outs. Time-outs are valuable when there is a clear explanation of what you’re trying to accomplish. Otherwise, the time-out may be only because the parent is out of control.

There are dangerous transactions going on inside children's heads when they know they're being worked by a parent. They may accommodate you. But inside, where you may never see, they may be learning to not trust you, or the God who apparently gave you such an arbitrary technique." (The Cure and Parents-63)
